

30 practical ways to let others have the higher place:

1. Admit when you made a mistake, and take responsibility for it.
2. Listen attentively to someone speaking without interrupting.
3. Accept a compliment when it's given and just say, "Thank you."
4. Give the credit away to others. Take the responsibility onto yourself.
5. Be willing to learn from anyone, regardless of their position or status.
6. Thank others for their help and support. You didn't get here on your own.
7. Recognize the strengths and abilities of others, and say it out loud.
8. Be quick to offer assistance to others without needing repayment.
9. Apologize sincerely when you've hurt or wronged someone. You do it more than you realize.
10. Be open to being corrected. You're not always right.
11. Show appreciation for the efforts and contributions of others. Throw more parties than you do.
12. Collaborate with others more. Your ideas get better with perspective.
13. Be slow to judge others; you don't know their story.
14. Be genuinely happy for others' successes and achievements. Throw some more parties!
15. Treat everyone with respect, regardless of their social status or background.
16. Be aware of your own limitations and seek help when needed. (For example: ask for directions more often).
17. Give others the benefit of the doubt. You might have made the same decision if you were faced with the same issues.
18. Keep seeking personal growth. There's always room for more improvement and growth.
19. Step aside and let others take the spotlight.
20. Ease up in slow traffic. The person in front of you isn't driving slow to make you mad. There's a real reason.
21. Compromise and find common ground more often. Don't demand your way.
22. Receive constructive criticism as an opportunity for growth.
23. Never gossip or speak ill of others... even if they're of a different political persuasion. Talk like Jesus.
24. Seek out opportunities to serve others selflessly.
25. Say "thank you" more. Success is often a result of collective effort, not just individual brilliance.
26. Recognizing and appreciating the unique strengths and talents of others.
27. Giving others the space to express their ideas and opinions.
28. Practice gratitude every day. It takes an immense amount of pride to say you're not impressed with this world and everything you've been blessed with.
29. Pray with others. Pray for others. Seek prayer from others. You need God to show up way more than you know.
30. Receive God's forgiveness for your sins. He's offering it to you for free! Just believe.
